General Management Plan for Aztec Ruins Underway Newsletter Available

An important planning effort is underway for Aztec Ruins National Monument. National Park Service staff and the public have been exchanging ideas and views about the future of this ancestral Pueblo and World Heritage Site. The process will result in a General Management Plan, a master plan that will serve as the primary blue print for park management over the next fifteen to twenty years.

A recent newsletter reports on the progress of the planning effort. It describes public comments, preliminary results of a visitor survey, and presents foundational statements developed by the park.

The newsletter also describes the planning process, and invites the public to continue in its development.

The newsletter can be viewed on the internet by logging onto the monument's website at www.nps.gov/azru and selecting "General Management Plan".

It is also available in the following places: Altrurian Library, Aztec; Farmington Public Library, Farmington; City of Aztec offices, Aztec; Salmon Ruin, Bloomfield; Bureau of Land Management, Farmington; Aztec High School and Koogler Middle School, Aztec. Those wishing to be mailed a copy of the newsletter can contact the park.

Comments and suggestions for the General Management Plan can be sent in writing to:
